DANGER IN SODA.

Serious Results Sometimes Follow Its Excessive Use.

Common soda is all right in its place and indispensable in the kitchen and for cooking and washing purposes, but it was never intended for a medicine, and people who use it as such will some day regret it.

We refer to the common use of soda to relieve heartburn or sour stomach, a habit which thousands of people practice almost daily, and one which is fraught with danger; moreover the soda only gives temporary relief and in the end the stomach trouble gets worse and worse.

The soda acts as a mechanical irritant to the walls of the stomach and bowels and cases are on record where it accumulated in the intestines, causing death by inflammation or peritonitis.

Dr. Harlandson recommends as the safest and surest cure for sour stomach (acid dyspepsia) an excellent preparation sold by druggists under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. These tablets are large 20 grain lozenges, very pleasant to taste and contain the natural acids, pepsone and digestive elements essential to good digestion, and when taken after meals they digest the food perfectly and promptly before it has time to ferment, sour and poison the blood and nervous system.

Dr. Wuerth states that he invariably uses Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in all cases of stomach derangements and finds them a certain cure not only for sour stomach, but by promptly digesting the food they create a healthy appetite, increase the force and strengthen the action of the heart and liver. They are not a cathartic, but intended only for stomach diseases and weakness and will be found reliable in any stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach.

All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at 50c. per package. A little book describing all forms of stomach weakness and their cure mailed free by addressing the Stuart Co., of Marshall, Mich.

CANADA'S SELF GOVERNMENT.

Offered as a Model for the Form of Territory Lately Captured from Spain.

E. H. Brodigue in Times-Herald.

It has been stated that the president himself favors a colonial form of government for the territory acquired from Spain as a result of the war. Also that the Canadian system is the one most likely to be copied.

Long ago Gladstone advocated the absolute right of local self-government in the colonies. This rule has been generously applied to Canada, with the result that since the federation of the colonies in 1867, very little if any friction has existed between the dominion and Downing street. The present system is comfortable, not too expensive, and combines with a feeling of local independence the strong protection of Great Britain. The whole of the provinces, Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba and British Columbia, are confederate and consolidated under the legislative and administrative control of the parliamentary government at Ottawa, composed of a house of commons, a senate, a governor general, and an executive council of Canada. The British North American act carried into effect the federation of the provinces into one dominion, with a constitution similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom. It provided that "the executive government of an overseas Canada is vested in the queen," to be carried on in her name by the governor general, with the aid and advice of a council to be chosen by the governor general, and styled "the queen's privy council for Canada." In practice, the governor general is given but little power, his authority being controlled by various statutes, imperial and colonial. Canada is subject to British rule, but it governs itself. It is not permitted to utter its voice in regard to British policy, but Britain has the right to dictate to the dominion in all extreme cases, so that the restraining power is not want of authority, but rather that common sense and concession without which actual liberty and a constitutional government would be impossible.

Among the advantages of the Canada political machine are cited: Responsible, parliamentary government on the English model. A permanent and non-political public service. Appointments of all judges and public officials by the crown on the advice of responsible ministers and heads of departments who have seats in parliament, and a judiciary removable only by the successful impeachment by the legislature of the provinces—not by the legislature of the dominion—and free from all political or popular influences. A secret ballot in all classes of public elections, a complete system of laws for the repression and punishment of bribery and corruption at political as well as municipal elections, and the trial by an independent judiciary of all corrupt practices at elections.

The infrequency of elections. The separation of municipal from party politics, dominion as well as provincial. Edward Meek, an authority, says: "In its federal aspect the Canadian constitution bears some resemblance to the constitution of the United States. It also resembles the American constitution in that it restricts the powers of legislation and government, both federal and provincial, within certain limits, and in the fact that notwithstanding the power of disallowance possessed by the imperial government over dominion legislation, and by the dominion government over provincial legislation, the courts of the provinces, the supreme court of the dominion, and lastly the judicial committee of the privy council, must decide on the constitutionality of all acts, both of the federal parliament and the provincial legislatures, when their validity is questioned in actions or a case submitted."

But there are wide points of difference, as further quotation shows: "The government of Canada is cabinet government. In Canada the legislative and executive powers are combined, and are performed by the same officials, the same as in England. In Canada all the legislation must be enacted by parliament. In Canada the residue of the legislative and executive powers is in the federal government. In Canada the queen's representation has no veto power."

Everything Going. From the Chicago Daily Tribune. The steamer rolled and pitched in the waves. "Death boy," groaned Cholly, at the end of his first hour on shipboard, "promise me you will send my remains home to my people!" "Death boy," feebly moaned Cholly, "you need not send my remains home. There won't be any."

BEAUTY AND FASHION JOIN HANDS in making this the crowning event of the year. A brilliant and glittering feast of novelties; works of art and creative genius in Women's Headwear that gives to our two great stores an individuality of style nowhere else to be found in this entire section.

Three Great Exhibition Days.

During which time the most magnificent collection of Trimmed Hats ever gathered together will be on view. Every one of them the personification of style, elegance and grace, bearing the stamp of originality in design and perfection in art.

We Command Leadership in Millinery

Because the combined output of our two big stores in Scranton and Wilkes-Barre is greater than all the other stores together. Our Mr. Edward Long has devoted his life to the study of fashion. Surrounding him is a corps of the ablest associates and assistants that money and brains can procure. Our show rooms are the finest in the state. Very few houses in America are as well equipped as we.

Paris, London and Berlin Come to Our Own Show Rooms

Thus do the fashions of the world congregate here and mingle with our own creations—so near alike as to be twins. And no matter what your hat requirement may be, whether for every day wear or for the swellest of functions, price will be found absolutely lowest, for we lead in lowness of prices as strongly as in height of style.

As Millinery Marks the Season's Opening==

So Do Other Departments Don Autumn's Garb

And our display throughout the store on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday next will be worth a journey of miles to see. Under this massive roof is gathered an unequalled collection of the World's Finest Merchandise. Not a season's novelty but what is first shown here—a matchless, inconceivable array that we shall take great pride in showing to you.
